Leading the lineup is a remarkable artifact from one of hockey's most iconic players:

Bobby Orr's 1968-69 Boston Bruins Game-Worn Jersey

Reinforcing his dominance as arguably the best player in the NHL, Bobby Orr continued to steamroll through the league in his third season in 1968-69, earning his second-consecutive James Norris Trophy and NHL first All-Star team selection as well as being the NHL Plus/Minus leader.

Completely unaltered and photo-matched to that milestone 1968-69 season, this true museum-quality specimen exemplifies the highest level of importance and desirability when factoring in that it was worn by the man during his early career that many consider the greatest player in NHL history.
